Two young pigs with wanderlust overcome their fears and set off on a journey away from their familiar surroundings, finding new friends and even seeing the stars for the very first time.

CONTENT

The two Mangalica pigs Crummel and Fussel like nothing better than to lie around in mud for hours at a time – but they are also curious about the world. They want to know what that bright thing in the sky is, and what makes that dreadful noise they keep hearing. Their curiosity is stronger than their fear of the unknown, and so they boldly leave their home for the first time in their lives. They soon find an owl is the source of the strange sounds, and the owl tells them about the moon and the many, many lights in the night sky. The furry pigs want to see this enchanting sight for themselves, but it's not so easy when your neck is quite short. An accidental change of perspective helps them see the stars after all...

THE AUTHOR

Judith Allert was born in 1982 and studied modern German literature in Bayreuth, where she also published her first children's books. In 2009 she completed her master's thesis on the topic of fantasy writing for children and teens, and she has been a freelance author ever since. Today the author lives on an old farm with her husband, dogs, cats, horses, hens, and wooly pigs.
